

PEI
College of Occupational Therapists

CODE OF ETHICS

Purpose of the Code of Ethics

The Prince Edward Island College of Occupational Therapists (PEICOT) Code of Ethics outlines the values and principles intended to guide the conduct of occupational therapists in Prince Edward Island. The code recognizes that occupational therapists have obligations and responsibilities to their clients, the profession, the public, their colleagues and themselves. Occupational therapists are committed to providing caring, competent and ethical service to their clients. The purpose of the Code is to:

- encourage self-reflection and inform decision-making among occupational therapists with the expectation that the client's welfare is always the primary concern in any ethical decision;
- provide the public, including clients, with information about the basic ethical care and service that is expected from a registered occupational therapist; and
- guide the establishment of standards of practice and guidelines for regulatory responsibilities and activities.

Occupational therapists are expected to be familiar with this Code and to integrate it into their day-to-day practice. The values and expectations are not intended to be inclusive; they are general statements intended for interpretation, application and problem solving in specific situations.

It should be noted that PEICOT has not attempted to set out specific positions regarding all ethical issues that its registrants may face. All value statements and responsibilities set out in the Code are equally important and are not organized hierarchically.

Acknowledgements

The PEICOT acknowledges the College of Occupational Therapists of British Columbia (COTBC), the College of Occupational Therapists of Manitoba (COTM) and the New Brunswick Association of Occupational Therapists (NBAOT) for granting permission to adapt their Code of Ethics documents to meet the needs of occupational therapy practice in Prince Edward Island.

Occupational Therapy Values

A. Dignity and Worth

Occupational therapists recognize and respect that every client is unique and has intrinsic worth.

B. Individual Autonomy

Occupational therapists recognize and respect that every client has the right to and capacity for self-determination.

C. Safe, Competent and Ethical Care

Occupational therapists recognize and respect that every client has the right to safe, competent and ethical occupational therapy services.

D. Accountability

Occupational therapists are fully responsible for their practice and are obligated to account for their actions.

E. Confidentiality

Occupational therapists safeguard the confidentiality of information acquired in the context of professional relationships, to protect their clients' rights to privacy.

F. Fairness

Occupational therapists recognize and respect that every client has the right to quality occupational therapy services in accordance with individual needs.

G. Honesty and Transparency

Occupational therapists communicate openly and honestly in a clear and caring manner, and respect the client's right to comprehensive information regarding occupational therapy services.

H. Trusting and Respectful Practice Environment

Occupational therapists perform their professional duties in a manner that promotes a trusting and respectful practice environment, supporting safe and competent care.

Dignity and Worth

Occupational therapists recognize and respect that every client is unique and has intrinsic worth.

Occupational therapists are expected to:

- Provide service in a manner that upholds the dignity of clients.
- Respect the client's race, culture, gender, social status, language, sexual orientation, age or ability in the delivery of service.
- Respect the client's self-determination and choice.
- Assist clients to achieve optimum quality of life in all states of health.
- Recognize the power imbalance inherent in professional therapeutic relationships, and maintain appropriate professional boundaries.
- Act in the best interest of the client to maintain trust, and do not exploit the professional relationship for any personal, physical, emotional, financial, social or sexual gain.

Individual Autonomy

Occupational therapists recognize and respect that every client has the right to and capacity for self-determination.

Occupational therapists are expected to:

- Advocate for the client's right to determine and participate in meaningful occupations for his or her health and well-being.
- Provide complete and accurate information to enable the client to make informed decisions regarding the need for, and nature of, occupational therapy services, including information about the anticipated benefits and risks of accepting or refusing such services.
- Obtain and document informed consent for occupational therapy services. Consent may be established orally or in writing, or where this is not possible consent may be implied.
- Obtain informed consent for occupational therapy services provided by those under the occupational therapist's supervision, such as students and support personnel.
- Recognize client's support network, and where appropriate, include their participation in occupational therapy services.
- Inform and involve the client as much as possible in the process of giving informed consent, even if the client does not have the capacity to do so.
- Confirm the scope and authority of alternative decision makers.

Safe, Competent and Ethical Care

Occupational therapists recognize and respect that every client has the right to safe, competent and ethical occupational therapy services.

Occupational therapists are expected to:

- Practice within the scope of the profession, with knowledge of and adherence to national and provincial legislation, regulations, standards of practice and policies relevant to the practice of occupational therapy.
- Provide service in areas of professional competence, and practice within the limits of their knowledge and skills.
- Regularly conduct self-assessments of their practice and participate in professional development to maintain currency and competence.
- Seek support and additional training when changing area of practice.
- Integrate current evidence-based practices relevant to occupational therapy service delivery.
- Request consultation or refer clients to colleagues or other health care professionals when such actions are in the best interest of the client.
- Strive to participate in activities that contribute to the body of knowledge and skills of the profession.

Accountability

Occupational therapists are fully responsible for their practice and are obligated to account for their actions.

Occupational therapists are expected to:

- Act in the client's best interest and in a manner consistent with the occupational therapist's professional responsibilities.
- Retain responsibility for all occupational therapy services provided to the client by others under their supervision.
- Limit or discontinue the provision of professional service if their physical or mental health is compromised by illness, injury or substance use that will affect their work. Where possible, occupational therapists are expected to provide the client with information regarding alternative services and assist with referrals.

- Recognize that professional obligations override management policies, and take all reasonable steps to resolve situations where management policies and professional obligations are in conflict.
- Report unsafe, incompetent or unethical care, including boundary violations, to the appropriate authorities.
- Act in a manner that maintains respect for the profession and its registrants.

Confidentiality

Occupational therapists safeguard the confidentiality of information acquired in the context of professional relationships, to protect their clients' right to privacy.

Occupational therapists are expected to:

- Comply with all provincial legislation and professional regulations regarding confidentiality.
- Collect and use only information that is relevant and essential for quality service delivery.
- Take action to safeguard personal information throughout the process of collecting, recording, releasing, securing and destroying this information.
- Recognize that a duty of confidentiality remains even after the therapist-client relationship has ended.
- Share personal information with others only with the authorized consent of the client, or where failure to disclose would cause significant harm, or if legally required.

Fairness

Occupational therapists recognize and respect that every client has the right to quality occupational therapy services in accordance with individual needs.

Occupational therapists are expected to:

- Provide service to all clients in a respectful and unbiased manner regardless of race, culture, gender, social status, language, sexual orientation, age or ability.
- Advocate for sufficient human and material resources to provide safe, efficient and competent care.
- Advocate for the fair and equitable provision of occupational therapy services.

Honesty and Transparency

Occupational therapists communicate openly and honestly in a clear and caring manner, and respect the client's right to comprehensive information regarding occupational therapy services.

Occupational therapists are expected to:

- Communicate openly and effectively in a manner appropriate to their clients, and do not withhold any relevant information.
- Provide qualifications and credentials to clients on request, including a means of contacting the Prince Edward Island College of Occupational Therapists.
- Accurately describe their knowledge, skills, and abilities in a manner appropriate for the intended audience.
- Provide clients with access to their occupational therapy information in accordance with provincial legislation and professional regulations.

- Identify and disclose any competing interests and expectations of all stakeholders, including themselves, and in situations of real or perceived conflict of interest, take appropriate action in the best interest of the client.
- Explain to the client the nature and extent of the occupational therapist’s responsibility to the fee payer.
- Use clear, accurate, and verifiable information in any advertising. This must conform to legal, social and professional norms that support the integrity and dignity of the profession.

Trusting and Respectful Practice Environment

Occupational therapists perform their professional duties in a manner that promotes a trusting and respectful practice environment, supporting safe and competent care.

Occupational therapists are expected to:

- Assist their colleagues to develop their knowledge and skills by providing timely and accurate feedback regarding safe, competent and ethical care.
- Assist their colleagues to recognize and address potential boundary violations.
- Assist their colleagues to recognize and take corrective action to address potential unsafe, incompetent or unethical care.
- Provide mentorship and guidance to assist in the professional development of students.
- Foster work and practice environments in which occupational therapists and other health care workers are treated with respect.
- Respect the skills and knowledge of other team members, and seek to collaborate with them.
- Receive and act upon feedback given by colleagues regarding the provision of safe, competent and ethical care.
- Collaborate with colleagues to develop and maintain environments conducive to ethical practice.

GLOSSARY
Client	Individuals, families and/or groups, agencies or organizations receiving care and/or service from an occupational therapist. ‘Client’ is synonymous with ‘patient’ or ‘consumer’, and means a recipient of occupational therapy services.
Informed consent	The client’s agreement to authorize occupational therapy services on a full disclosure of the facts required to make an informed decision. The obligation to obtain informed consent is a legal and professional duty.
Occupational therapy service	Occupational therapy service may include direct care, research, education, consultation, care coordination, program development, administration or a combination thereof.
Personal information	Any recorded information, collected by an occupational therapist, that would identify an individual is considered personal information in the context of occupational therapy practice.
Professional boundary	The limit of what constitutes appropriate professional conduct. Boundaries make relationships professional and safe for the clients.

Approved By	Established	Reviewed/Revised	Reviewed/Revised	Next Review
PEIOTRB Board	December 9, 2015	February 8, 2017	December 12, 2017	N/A
PEICOT Council	November 20, 2018	November 25, 2019		September 2022